Meet Our Hospital Nursing Department

Professional nursing grew from military and religious origins. Armies in combat looked to nuns as the most experienced health care providers. A painting commissioned by President Abraham Lincoln depicts a Sister of Mercy tending a Union soldier in a tent hospital. The first professional training school for nurses opened following the Civil War. Nurses -- and the Sisters of Mercy -- are highly respected and extremely important in serving the health needs of the nation.

Judy Sanchez-Fernandez

For 14 years, Judy Sanchez-Fernandez has served the hospital and community as a patient care technician in the emergency room and as a Spanish language interpreter.

In 2015, she was appointed by the County Commissioners to membership on the Board of Health. Her valuable service has been coupled with higher education, and in 2018 she will graduate with a bachelor's degree in business from Southeastern Oklahoma State University. Soon after, she plans to enter nursing school.

Paulette Manning, RN, School Nurse

Paulette Manning can't seem to get enough of Mercy Health/Love County Hospital. Following a 16-year retirement from hospital nursing, she took months of course work to restore her RN license, then, in 2016, resumed a career that had started in 1984. She served one year as the RN at the hospital's Adult Day Center, followed by a new position as the hospital's school nurse for Marietta and Greenville schools. During "retirement," she served as a hospital volunteer.

Katie Eubanks, CNA

After 15 years in industrial work at a refinery and a tire company in Ardmore, Katie Eubanks completed certification as a nurse's aide to join our hospital in May.

"I like to help people in any job I'm in, and I have been helped a lot by my coworkers who take the time to teach me more about patient care and hospital equipment."

She would like to enroll in a four-year college for a bachelor's degree in nursing.
